What to consider when choosing a philanthropic services partner

Sustainability and longevity

How long has the organisation existed and does it have good governance to ensure its longevity? Most philanthropic journeys last at least 20-30 years.

Fees and charges

Are the fees and charges commensurate with the scale of investment and services provided?

Flexibility

Are there any undue restrictions on your client's giving or is the service fully donor advised? Can the organisation provide portability should things change over time?

Educational and networking opportunities

What kind of opportunities does the organisation provide for your clients to learn about best practice giving and meet other donors and changemakers?

Investment philosophy and returns

Are the investment philosophy and returns appropriate for your client's giving goals? Are the funds invested in an ethically responsible manner?

Ease of operation

Does the organisation provide ease of operation for you and your clients, with appropriate reporting and simple processes?

Strength of client services

Are client services a key element of the organisation's offering? Can the organisation help develop, review and evaluate your client's giving and their impact over time?

Shared values

Does the organisation share values with you and your clients? What sort of Australia are they hoping to see and how are they going about it?

Our Investment Commitment

100 per cent of our investment portfolio is responsibly invested, actively seeking out strong financial returns and a positive social or environmental impact. Our approach looks to ensure growth of your client's funds without risking their initial investments.

As the first Australian philanthropic foundation to become a signatory to the UNPRI: Principles for Responsible Investment and a recognised leader in this space, we're proud to increase the impact of your clients' giving by ensuring their funds are doing good while waiting to be granted out.
